In other words, to disprove the existence of God, one would have to be God. The need for an eternal and self-existent Creator can be proven. Atheism cannot be proven. Another crucial issue to consider is the fact that the acceptance or rejection of the existence of God has more implications for life, action, and morality than any other issue.

Belief and Beliefs: Can the existence of a god be proven or disproven? Thanks for the A2A, but I'm sure this question has been asked and answered thousands of times.

So you can prove or disprove God unless you are God, but the need of a God and Creator can be proven. This existence can not all be an illusion because that implies that something has to exist to be having the illusion and there is definite evidence that proves that the universe has a beginning.

Can God be proven scientifically? it is difficult to even begin to understand how any scientist can develop an experiment by which God can be demonstrated to exist.

Can the existence of God be proven? So no; nobody can disprove the existence of any god. But gods have no more evidence in their favour than pixies.
